List of Figures

Images and illustrations can appear in the text of your dissertation or at the end of your dissertation. The list of figures, with page numbers, should at the least include the basic information about each image, including its title. If you choose to use the Insert Caption tool in Word, your list of figures and your captions will be the same.

Each separate list (e.g., figures, tables, appendices) should be on a separate page. The lists themselves should be single spaced, with a double space between entries.

List of Tables

Like the List of Figures, other Lists (of Tables, Appendices, etc.) should be single-spaced.

Chapter 1: Titles and Page Numbers

Chapter titles should appear in the Table of Contents; section headings can appear in the Table of Contents.

Page numbers should be in lower-case Roman numerals for all pages until the start of Chapter 1, with the unnumbered copyright page as page i (the first page that shows the page number (ii) will be the Abstract). Arabic numerals begin with Chapter 1 and continue through the rest of the dissertation. No other text except the page number should appear in the header or footer.

Chapter 2: Formatting

Margins should be 1 inch on all sides. The left-hand margin can be 1.5 inches for binding, as in this guide. Headings of the main sections of the dissertation (Abstract, Acknowledgements, Table of Contents, List of Figures, and each chapter should begin 2 inches from the top of the page.

Body text should be double-spaced, with the exception of long quotations (which should be offset and single-spaced), lists of figures or appendices, text of footnotes or endnotes, and entries in your bibliography.

Appendix

Optional section. If you have several appendices, you can list them in a "List of Appendices" in the front matter with the optional lists of figures, illustrations, tables, etc.

Bibliography

Your bibliography (or References, or Works Cited), which should include all sources used in your dissertation, can follow the preferred citation style of your discipline. You can divide the bibliography among primary and secondary sources, and can include a list of abbreviations. Entries should be single spaced, with a double space between entries, and a hanging indent.
